WRAPPING PROXE POSTERS ONTO FOAMBOARD
NEEDED: Two people (to eye alignment on each side and keep taut), a flat clean surface, gaffer tape, duct tape or packing tape.
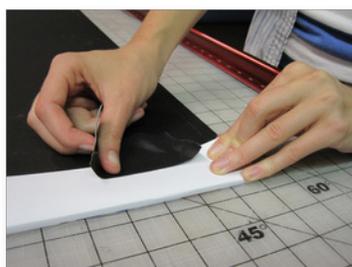

1. Place the board on top of the poster face down. Line up the side edges on the not-to-be wrapped left and right sides.
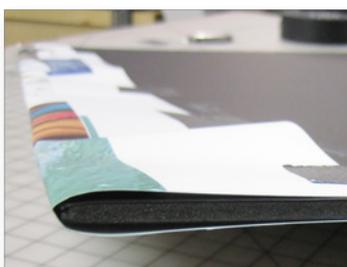

2. Check where the picture ends on the top and bottom and align your edges accordingly. (Don't cut off Will Smith's head, for instance.)

3. Fold and crease the edges where you want to wrap it.

4. Hold the paper taut as you tape it down, with small sections of tape.

5. Tape sections all the way down that side of the board, so it looks like this, folded around and taped.

6. Pull the other side out from the board, so it's taut, then fold up tight around it. Tape down as before.

7. The back is looking good.

8. Ta-da!

OPTIONAL-- If the paper is wider than the board on unwrapped sides, you may want to trim it. But, trim at your own risk, since an overhang looks fine in front.

As demonstrated by Kayte, InterVarsity Web Developer, who's gifts "look like a 5-year-old wrapped them" (so if she can, you can) and Grete, twentyonehundred Designer, who designs these posters.
